County moves back up to yellow COVID-19 advisory level

The local trend
of rising cases
reflected in counties
across the state

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

After several weeks of being at the lowest COVID-19 advisory level by the Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH), that came to an end Wednesday when Wabash County was moved back up to yellow, the second-lowest level.

The weekly update to the state's advisory map showed Wabash County was far from the only place to experience a new resurgence of cases. Several other counties which had also been at blue were also moved to yellow, and two counties, Wells and Blackford, are now in the orange category, the second-highest.

During a televised press conference on Wednesday, state health commissioner Dr. Kristina Box said they had seen the positivity rate tick up slightly across the state in recent days from 3.3 percent last week to 3.9 percent this week. Box said the hospitalizations and hospital admissions were also up.

"These metrics tell us that cases are increasing in parts of the state, which again serves as a reminder that we cannot throw caution to the wind and behave as if the pandemic is over," said Box.

The recent surge of infections comes just as the ISDH opened COVID-19 vaccine availability to all Hoosiers 16 and older, which also occurred Wednesday.

The expansion makes more than 1.3 million additional individuals eligible for the vaccine.

As of Friday, a total of 2,927,796 doses have been administered in Indiana. This includes 1,730,567 first doses and 1,197,229 individuals who are fully vaccinated. The fully vaccinated number represents individuals who have received a second dose of the Pfizer or Moderna vaccines and those who received the single Johnson & Johnson vaccine.

With the expansion, the state has now made COVID-19 vaccines available to every Hoosier for whom the vaccine is currently authorized.

"The state's focus will remain on providing equitable access to vaccine and providing current and accurate information so that Hoosiers can be informed about their options," stated the ISDH.

Hoosiers scheduling appointments may experience waits during periods of high volume. Vaccine appointments will extend over the next several weeks to align with expected vaccine deliveries to the state. Individuals seeking an earlier appointment are encouraged to look at openings in surrounding counties.

To schedule a vaccine, visit <https://ourshot.in.gov> and select a location from one of more than 530 clinics around the state. Hoosiers who do not have a computer or cell phone or those who need assistance scheduling an appointment can call 211 or contact one of Indiana's Area Agencies on Aging or AARP. Nearly 70 libraries around the state also are helping Hoosiers schedule their appointments.

Individuals age 16 and 17 are only eligible to receive the Pfizer vaccine and should search for a site that lists

Manchester University pharmacy student prep the COVID-19 vaccine for use.

University is arranging transportation for students and others who need it

By ANNE GREGORY

Up to 500 members of the Manchester University community can be accommodated at a COVID-19 vaccination clinic next week.

Manchester is teaming up with the Wabash County vaccine clinic, which is a partnership of the City of Wabash, the Wabash County Emergency Management Agency, the Town of North Manchester and Parkview Wabash Hospital.

The MU clinic will be open from 8 to 10 a.m. Saturday, April 10, for the first dose, and 8 to 10 a.m. Saturday, May 8, for the second dose, at the Honeywell Center in Wabash.

"The Wabash County vaccine clinic partnership is pleased to work with Manchester University in providing a clinic specific to the university's faculty, staff and students," said Marilyn Custer-Mitchell, president of Parkview Wabash Hospital. "We recognize it's important for all members of the Manchester University family to have access to a vaccine, so they can continue their educational activities and work in a safe environment."

The University is arranging transportation for students and others who need it.

"Manchester is excited about the opportunity to work with the Wabash County vaccine clinic for our students. Getting shots in the arm of as many people on campus as possible is our main priority," said Abby Van Vlerah, vice president of student life and leader of the University's COVID response team.

"Vaccinated students, faculty, and staff will help us return to a more normal academic year in the fall," she said. "We're thankful to offer this clinic and are pleased that so many of our students wanted to be vaccinated."

Southwood students awarded at reimagined ISSMA contest

The district contest
combined the state
judging in one virtual event this year

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Many events had to be reimagined over the last year due to COVID-19, and the Indiana State School Music Association (ISSMA) vocal and piano solo and ensemble contest was no exception.

"The COVID-19 pandemic continues to have a profound impact on music programs across our state," said Southwood High School choral director Susan Keefer. "It has also greatly affected how ISSMA continues to approach their mission of providing educational assessment opportunities for their member schools. Social-distancing and masking made the contest participation more challenging for students to participate in ensembles and extra rehearsals; individuals had to spend more time working independently to be successful."

Also, Keefer said the contest was further delayed due to weather wreaking havoc on school schedules and their ability to finish recording and submitting events.

Keefer said in the end, though, several local students were able to shine despite these obstacles.

"Our county school music directors worked hard to help students participate this year and are proud of what these students accomplished," said Keefer.

Southwood High School students were among those who participated in the ISSMA district vocal and piano solo and ensemble contest.

Keefer said the district contest combined the state judging in one virtual event this year; using a specified ISSMA-controlled mobile app, a video of each entry was submitted by the teacher to be judged.

Southwood High School had 19 junior high students and 13 high school students enter 26 entries that brought home 22 first ratings, three second place ratings and one bronze rating. Eight Group I entries received gold ratings at the state level contest.

Contest participants are entered according to the level of difficulty of their music; group levels I to V, I being the most difficult and V being the least difficult music.

Group I music must be selected from a required list of music. Participants receive medals for first, second, and third places only in each group level.

Only group I participants that receive a first rating advance to the state-level judging. Group I events earning a Gold Rating will be awarded a State Solo and Ensemble medal and have been allowed to order State Solo and Ensemble patches and rockers through their director following the event. All other events will be awarded District Solo and Ensemble medals. All awards will be mailed to each school.

High school results

■ Group I entries receiving gold for district and state contest are: Vocal solos: Isaac King singing "Across the Western Ocean," Cage DuBois singing "Rollin' Down to Rio," Micah Dale singing "Danny Boy," Isabel Davis singing "When Love is Kind," Katelyn Ranck singing "Star Vicino," Olivia

Pathfinder Services, city open new group home

Second local ribbon-cutting last month marked Disability Awareness Month

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

For the second time in a month, local leaders and Pathfinder Services officially opened a new facility in Wabash.

On Tuesday, Pathfinder Services and the city of Wabash held a ceremony cutting the ribbon on the new Pathfinder Services Group Home at 260 Half St., said communications and volunteer coordinator Nicole Hahn.

Hahn said the home is a newly built 4,000-square-foot structure that nearly doubles the area of the previous home and allows for more space for activities for the seven women with intellectual and developmental disabilities who live in the home.

"We are grateful to everyone who helped us make this dream home a reality," said CEO and president Danielle Tips. "The extra space will allow the ladies who live here to age in place with all of the necessary space and amenities to live life to the fullest."

Hahn said Pathfinder Services "had many partners in this project."

Hahn said the land for the home was purchased by Rayco Home Services and then donated to Pathfinder

Here is to a truly healthy heart

By DAVE PHILLIPS

April is Heartworm Awareness Month. Heartworms kill a great number of dogs. The American Heartworm Society reports that more than a million dogs currently have heartworm disease.

What a way to start an Easter devotional.

Heartworm is a parasite that lodges in the heart of the animal. It is transmitted to the dog by mosquitoes. This roundworm continually reproduces in the animal’s heart. The animal may look great on the outside, but its energy and life are slowly being drained. However, the dog’s owner can buy medicine to prevent and cure this disease.

The human heart also has heartworm. I am not talking about the physical heart but the core of who we are. It began way back at the creation of the universe and the human race. God created Adam and Eve and placed them in the most beautiful place imaginable on Earth. The heart of God. The hearts of the man and woman and even all creation beat as one. Whether we know it or not, it is still the deepest longing of every man and woman on the planet. A longing for peace and wholeness, that we all be able to get along.

However, the human heart has heartworm. It is not passed on by mosquitoes but from one generation to the next. It is a congenital heart defect. It is in us as well as all around us. The ugly word sin has been passed down to us ever since Adam and Eve decided to do their own thing, to disobey God’s one simple command. Sin creates dis-ease in us. It separates us from others. Ever have someone lie to you? Have close are you to them now? Ever have someone abuse you, bully you, gossip about you, take advantage of you? All these along with other sins recorded in the Bible fracture relationships, make it hard for us to get along.

Sin makes it hard for us to get along with ourselves. A divided heart keeps us on edge, insecure, vulnerable to failure and fear. A divided heart wilts under pressure. We exhibit self-defeating attitudes and behaviors. We become our own worst enemy. We have no energy to live, love, pursue life or healthy relationships. It becomes for us a living hell on Earth.

Then came Easter. The creator God, who knows and loves us best, provided the cure. Then came Jesus, very God, to save his people from their sin. It involved a price. This cure was and is not cheap. He was nailed to the cross as the final sacrifice for our sin. The physical pain was enough, but the pain that broke his heart was the burden of all or our sin. He felt the separation: “My God, My God, why have you forsaken me.” Then came peace to his heart, “Father into your hands I commend my spirit.” His last word on the cross followed: “It is finished.” He had completed the work He was sent to do, to provide the perfect, final sacrifice for the forgiveness of sin, the restoration of the human. That our hearts might beat as one with His.

His broken body was placed in the grave. But it did not remain there. He arose from death, the grave with a new body free from death. His resurrection confirmed the finality of his sacrifice. We are made to live not only on this Earth with Jesus but with Him in eternity. In Christ Jesus our sin is forgiven. We are raised to a new life here and now, and someday we will be raised up from the grave.

Has Easter come to you? Have you received the cure for your heart sin? Open your heart to Jesus, confess your need to Him, received his forgiveness, follow him daily, focus on His purpose for you, find a church family to care for your heart. Find someone whose heart you can care for. Let Easter come to you. Here is to a truly healthy heart.

The story behind ‘I Love Jesus, But I Want To Die’

The first time Sarah J. Robinson tried to kill herself was eight months after she became a born-again Christian.

She had struggled with suicidal thoughts since elementary school. She would imagine jumping into highway traffic, or fill her hand with pills and consider swallowing them. But her depression only deepened after she was baptized as a teen and poured herself into Bible studies and upbeat youth group projects.

She felt like a failure. Finally, one night, she pressed a knife harder and harder into her skin – but she couldn’t force herself to end it all on the kitchen floor. Looking back, she wrote: “I didn’t want my family to find me there, so I got up and put the knife away. I climbed into bed, put on a worship CD, cursed God and went to sleep.”

Robinson kept stacks of journals, which provided crucial material for “I Love Jesus, But I Want to Die,” a book written during three years of struggle and research. Her battles with depression have continued, even during her years working as a youth minister.

Images of handwritten pages appear in the book, including this 2007 plea: “Lord, I’m struggling. I need your help. This week has been really rough – I’ve been sad & lonely & angry & numb. I cut myself and berated myself, wished for the end, tried so hard to hide it. I’m not just empty – I’ve become a vacuum, taking on more and more of the absence of your presence. ... God, please don’t let me be lost.”

It was hard to be that vulnerable, said Robinson, reached by phone in Nashville. But including actual journal pages “seemed like a no-brainer” if the goal was to “let other people who are hurting know they are not alone. I wanted them to know that I’ve been there – in that kind of midnight.”

Among secular researchers, it’s common to find two views of mental health issues, said Robinson, citing the work of Stanford University researcher Carol Dweck. The first is a “fixed mindset” that assumes these conditions are predetermined and unchangeable. Thus, “setbacks and failures reveal who we really are and will always be,” said Robinson. The second is a “growth mindset” that says individuals can adapt and change.

In pews and pulpits, many believers simply assume all mental health struggles represent a lack of faith. Strugglers will be healed if they dedicate themselves to Bible study and prayer while turning away from their sins. Church-based “pastoral counseling” is an option.

“The idea is that if I put the right things into the spiritual vending machine, then I’ll get the right things out,” said Robinson. “If I’m doing everything I’ve been told to do, but I’m not getting the benefits that I should, then something is wrong. ... I have failed, as many people say, to ‘choose joy.’”

The result, as she writes in the book, is this devastating equation: “God is good – just not to us. God is present, but not with us. God is gracious, but not to us. These thoughts lead to a cancerous self-hate, reinforcing the lie that our sickness is beyond God’s reach.”

The problem is that some people come from families that have struggled for generations. Others have been abused. Some have been diagnosed with bipolar disorder, chronic anxiety, eating disorders or blinding migraines. All of this leads to intense shame.

There are clergy, she added, who acknowledge that “some of these problems are outside our wheelhouse” – so they maintain lists of professional resources and form partnerships with licensed counselors. It’s also important to notice if pastors ever preach on subjects linked to anxiety and depression, mentioning that their congregations want to help.

“We need our pastors to make this a normal topic in the life of the church, not something that is seen as abnormal or strange to talk about,” said Robinson. “People need to know there are all kinds of issues here, not just something wrong with your ‘thought life.’ You can’t deal with a chemical imbalance by fixing your ‘thought life.’ ...

“We need a team. We need spiritual support. We need small groups. But in some cases, we need doctors. We need professionals. Churches have to know that they can’t have a one-size-fits-all solution to these kinds of problems.”

Indiana man faces 10th civil suit after sentence for molesting children

JEFFERSONVILLE (AP) — A southern Indiana man sentenced to 120 years in prison for molesting 20 children while working at a YMCA and an elementary school is facing a 10th civil lawsuit stemming from that abuse.

Michael Begin, 21, pleaded guilty in January 2019 to 20 counts of child molestation and was sentenced by a Clark County judge to the maximum 120-year sentence, with the final 20 years to be served on probation.

Prosecutors said the Jefersonville man’s young victims ranged in age from 3 to 8.

The victims’ families filed nine civil lawsuits against Begin during 2018, with most also naming the YMCA and Greater Clark County Schools Corporation as defendants.

An attorney for one of the families filed a civil tort on March 24 that names just Begin and the YMCA as defendants, the News and Tribune reported. That suit requests a judgment against the YMCA in an amount to be proven at trial and also seeks attorney fees.

The new lawsuit alleges that the YMCA failed in not properly notifying the school district of the molestation allegations, or that Begin had been suspended in September 2017 due to an alleged child sexual assault, thereby allowing more children to be molested over the following month.

Of the nine civil cases filed in 2018, some have been closed due to agreements reached, but at least one is headed for a jury trial, set for June in Clark County.

Suzanne B. (Estabrook) Dale

Sept. 7, 1941 – March 16, 2021

Suzanne B. (Estabrook) Dale, 79, died March 16, 2021, at home in Broomfield, Colorado of complications from congestive heart failure. Loving care from husband, Loren Dale, with support from children and grandchildren eased her peaceful passing.

Sue was born Sept. 7, 1941 in Chicago, Illinois and was raised as the youngest of four daughters by William Bernard Estabrook and Mary E. (Congdon) Estabrook. Sue married Loren on Nov. 5, 1960 in Chicago.

Together Sue and Loren moved to Freehold, New Jersey, where they had their two children. Sue worked at a Prudential Insurance office and Loren worked at Bell Labs. In 1969, they moved with Bell Labs to Boulder, Colorado.

A couple of years later, they settled in Broomfield. Sue then worked for many different local businesses and nannied for several families in the area. Baking at Karen's Country Kitchen in Louisville, Colorado, Sue was known for her pies, especially her lemon meringue and her award winning chocolate peanut butter pie.

She was preceded in death by her parents, and sisters Florence "Nancy" DeVries and Marlene Crook. She is survived by her husband of 60 years, Loren; her children, Laurie (Kevin) Morell of Texas and Brian (Jennifer Grush) Dale of Idaho; plus her beloved grandchildren, John and Grace; and her sister, Phyllis Hotwagner of Illinois. She will be interred in the Wabash Friends Cemetary at a later date.

Most of all, she enjoyed spending time with her grandchildren, kids and husband. She also enjoyed the Hallmark Channel, baking at home, Sudoku puzzles, and studying her Bible. She made sure family was taken care of, until even her final words, "I love you."

WEBSITE

"The new website was designed and created to offer a more user-friendly experience with improved functionality and navigation," said Long.

The new website went live Thursday, April 1.

Long said Visit Wabash County marketing manager Whitney Millsbaugh was "instrumental in ensuring the new website was created with the user experience in mind as well as making sure the site was easily functional on mobile devices."

Long said "relevant and relatable" photos were provided by Eric Schoening from Vertical Communications.

"The new website has taken a year to create from conception to completion. I have worked closely with the team from eGov Strategies, Mayor Long, Eric Schoening and Whitney Millsbaugh to ensure the new site is user-friendly, easy to navigate, content-rich with a friendly appearance, and new helpful features," said Smyth. "Now the community will easily be able to contact any of our departments and find answers to the most commonly asked questions with the newly added 'How do I?' section. We are very excited for the community to be able to use the new website as a resource for community information."

Long said the most notable features of the new website are the visual elements, "ease of information access, fillable online forms and a vast number of resources."

"The goal was to create recognizable points of interest and people to not only improve user experience but also to evoke emotions of joy and pride in our community," said Long. "The site includes many new features to help users quickly and easily navigate the site and connect them to key organizations in the community."

eGov Strategies is based in Indianapolis and also offers payment services to local governments, in addition to website building.

The second three weeks will provide second doses of Pfizer. The single-dose Johnson & Johnson vaccine will be offered in the final two weeks of the clinic. Appointments for the final weeks with the Johnson &

Johnson vaccine will be added in the coming days.

The Gary Public Transportation Corp. (GPTC) bus system is providing free rides to the Roosevelt site to people who show the driver their appointment confirmation. IU Health also is providing free transportation from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. CDT Monday through Friday and from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturdays. To schedule transportation through IU Health, call 888-484-3258.

The fixed site in Gary will be able to administer up to 2,000 vaccinations per day. Also, the mobile units will be deployed to nine counties across northern Indiana during the eight weeks. Two mobile units will be deployed at a time, and each can administer up to 500 vaccinations a day.

The Gary clinic will be a drive-thru operation but will have a walk-up option for individuals who arrive by bus or other means of transportation. The drive-thru entrance is located at 2145 Harrison St., Gary. The walk-up entrance can be accessed at 730 W. 25th Ave.

The mobile clinics will run from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. CDT as follows:

■ From Wednesday, April 7 through Saturday, April 10 at Pentecostal Temple Church, 2722 Wabash St., Michigan City.

■ From Wednesday, April 7 through Friday, April 9 at Merrillville Parks and Recreation Department, 6600 Broadway, Merrillville.

Appointments for both the Gary Roosevelt site and mobile clinic locations are required and can be scheduled online at ourshot.in.gov (use Chrome or Firefox as your browser). To find the Gary site at Roosevelt Park, enter the registration page and search by the 46407 ZIP code. To find the mobile sites, search for ZIP codes 46360 and 46410. If you do not have a computer or smartphone, call 211 between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. to schedule an appointment.

Local figures

■ On Friday, the ISDH reported two new local positive COVID-19 cases, bringing Wabash County's total to 3,422, with 14,679 tests. The local seven-day positivity rating for all tests was 5.9 percent. The local seven-day positivity rating for unique individuals was 7.8 percent.

Statewide figures

On Friday, the ISDH announced 1,256 additional Hoosiers have been diagnosed with COVID-19 through testing at state and private laboratories. That brings to 688,916 the number of Indiana residents now known to have had the novel coronavirus following corrections to the previous day's dashboard.

To date, 12,662 Hoosiers are confirmed to have died from COVID-19, an increase of 20 from the previous day. Another 407 probable deaths have been reported based on clinical diagnoses in patients for whom no positive test is on record.

A total of 3,267,629 unique individuals have been tested in Indiana, up from 3,262,518 on Thursday. A total of 8,975,412 tests, including repeat tests for unique individuals, have been reported to the state Department of Health since Feb. 26, 2020.

To find testing sites around the state, visit www.coronavirus.in.gov and click on the COVID-19 testing information link.

LETTERS GUIDELINES

The Wabash Plain Dealer encourages your letters to the editor forum, which is designed to be a forum for exchange of ideas between readers about issues of community importance.

Please sign your letter. Your name will be used with the letter that is published in the Plain Dealer. Your letter will be returned if it is your desire to remain anonymous.

Since we may want to write or call you to verify the letter, we ask that you include your address and telephone number. All our letters to the editor are published in the interest of fair play, so we trust our letter writers will refrain from personal attacks on other persons or groups.

A letter should be less than two pages long, preferably of double-spaced typing.

In order to give everyone an opportunity to participate in this exchange of ideas, please try to limit your letters to one per month per household.

To submit a letter, please write the Wabash Plain Dealer at 99 W. Canal St., Wabash, IN 46992.

Letters also may be hand-delivered to the newspaper office, 99 W. Canal St. The office is open 9-11:30 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. Monday through Friday. If you should deliver a letter during non-business hours, a drop slot is located to the left of the front door. Letters may be faxed to 260-563-0816, or email them to news@wabashplainedealer.com with "Letters to the Editor" in the subject line.

DAILY SCRIPTURE

And we know that for those who love God all things work together for good, for those who are called according to his purpose.

Romans 8:28

The CDC director fears ‘impending doom.’ You should too

It's like a flashback to a bad fever dream. A year after COVID-19 ravaged New York City, infections there are creeping up again and in other hot spots across the country, despite the largest vaccination push the nation has ever undertaken. The average number of COVID-19 cases recorded over the previous seven days has risen 10 percent in the past week, and hospitalizations are ticking up as well. Rising numbers of new infections in New Jersey, New York and Michigan are worrisome.

These signs of a coming fourth wave of COVID-19 prompted a rare moment of emotion Monday from one of the country's leading infectious disease fighters. "Right now, I'm scared," Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Director Rochelle Walensky said during a COVID-19 briefing, adding that she's having recurring feelings of "impending doom." Walensky urged people to remain careful for just a few more weeks, pleading: "Please hold on a little while longer."

We can see why she's so concerned. With the prospect of millions more COVID-19 vaccine deliveries rolling out in weeks to come, states have been shucking mask mandates and dropping restrictions as if the pandemic were over. On a recent Friday this month, more people traveled by airplane in the United States than on any day since the national emergency was declared. The spring break crowds got so out of hand in Miami Beach this month that city officials declared a state of emergency and curfew.

Look, we are feeling optimistic too. The end seems close; as Walensky put it, "We have so much to look forward to, so much promise and potential of where we are, and so much reason for hope." But shortsighted thinking could so easily force us backward in the critical race against a deadly disease that has killed about 550,000 people in the U.S.

Falling behind even a little comes with grave consequences. And not just because of the sickness and death that comes with it. As scientists have been warning for months, continued spread of the virus allows greater possibility of new, more drug-resistant or more deadly strains. Although the U.S. has made admirable headway on inoculations, with 28 percent of Americans having received at least one dose (and with new research showing that after two weeks, even a single shot provides 80 percent protection from COVID-19), this is no time to relax.

California, which suffered its worst surge earlier this year, is still on a good track. The average number of positive test results in the previous seven days is just 1.6 percent, and we can keep it low by making the right decisions now. That will require continued vigilance by everyone even when it seems the danger is passing, as well as sustained efforts by state and local authorities to distribute vaccines in hardest-hit communities, which suffered disproportionately from COVID-19 yet had the least access to the vaccine during the first weeks of the rollout.

For that reason, it's a little worrisome that the federal government is planning to shut down two mass vaccination operations in California, at Cal State L.A. and the Oakland Coliseum, on April 11, just four days before the state opens access to shots to everyone older than 16. The sites were launched in February in partnership with the state as part of a larger campaign to focus on inoculating Black and Latino Americans. As part of the effort, the sites got a separate supply of doses on top of the state's regular allocation.

It may not be necessary to keep those locations running as is. In Los Angeles, for example, Dodger Stadium could do thousands more shots if it had a large enough supply. But officials must remain focused on especially vulnerable communities, and state and local authorities should insist that the federal government continue to dedicate extra doses to meet those goals at least for a few more months.

President Biden, who is urging the governors and mayors who lifted their mask mandates to reimpose them (good luck with that), characterized this moment as a race against time to stop another terrible wave of COVID-19 from flooding the U.S. He's half right. It's a race, but against human nature.

— This editorial was first published in the Los Angeles Times.

Collecting can get squirrely

I've been trying to make sense of NFTs, those digital creations called "non-fungible tokens" that can sell for millions of dollars.

So, naturally, I thought of the squirrel.

It showed up one day underneath the tree that stood in the outdoor break area for Fort Wayne Newspapers, the umbrella company for the morning Journal Gazette and afternoon News-Sentinel. Only JG columnist Frank Gray and I were there at the time, and the squirrel walked right up,

One of us, I don't remember which, threw down a bite of a snack brought out from a vending machine, and the squirrel ate it. For the next several days, Frank and I kept going to the tree with snacks, and the squirrel kept coming up to accept them.

Then one day, the squirrel just wasn't there, having gone the way of other squirrels, to a tree in a better neighborhood or to meet his destiny as the blue plate special at the roadkill cafe.

But he was already destined to become legend. So, on my next birthday, Mary, one of my office pals, gave me a stuffed squirrel as a present. I whipped out my Swiss Army Knife and cut off the tag, which caused Mary to gasp in horror so loudly that I thought she might be having a stroke.

"You have destroyed its value!" she screeched.

Turns out the critter was a Beanie Baby, and Mary was a collector.

Beanie Babies, some of you might recall, became a craze in the 1990s when people started buying them not just as toys but as an "investment" sure to keep increasing in value, which they did, until, of course, they didn't.

Leo Morris

killing. Their creator, Ty Warner, became a billionaire.

But many more people held on too long until the bubble burst, their thousands in investment suddenly a relatively worthless pile of pellet-stuffed toy animals.

Think of NFTs as the digital equivalent of Beanie Babies. They have no physical reality, existing only as images in the cloud and visible only through electronic devices. When people "buy" one, they are in essence just buying a ticket proving they "own" the original, even though the creator might retain the copyright and millions of reproductions might be viewed for free by anyone with a laptop or a cellphone.

That makes no sense at all.

On the other hand, neither does paying millions of dollars for the original of "Starry Night" or "American Gothic" when anyone can enjoy a perfectly good copy for a few bucks. They're not paying that much because they appreciate art but because they believe the art will appreciate.

I had a print of Edward Hopper's "Nighthawks" on my office wall for 30 years and looked at it every day, and I now have it at home. The painting's sense of bleak isolation speaks to something primal in me. I went once to see the original at the Art Institute of Chicago and, frankly, it didn't impress me any more than my copy.

As for collectibles, I think they should have some intrinsic value other than their potential to whet my greed.

I once had about 100 cookbooks, until a storm took out a window in my sunroom and they were drenched in rain. Of course, anytime I needed a recipe I googled it, but the books were always there for me to browse, food porn for my depraved gastric needs.

My sister collects cookie jars in the shape of cats. Of course, she doesn't keep cookies in any of them, but I don't see here rubbing her hands together in glee and plotting to buy an island in the Caribbean when she sells them off. She just likes cats.

I have my tagless Beanie Baby squirrel at home, now, too, sitting beside my laptop. It's a reminder of a few pleasant days under a tree and serves as a warning not to get stupid with money. If somebody tempts me with an NFT of a squirrel under a tree, eating peanut butter crackers from somebody's hand, I will resist. What's worth $200 today and $69 million tomorrow will just be worthless pixels the day after tomorrow.

My brother the computer programmer (who collects guns, which he actually shoots, at his own range) once told me a saying from the early digital age: If you computerize a mess, you just get a faster mess.

That wisdom still holds. If you computerize investment stupidity, you just get faster stupidity.

A $1 lesson to improve campus speech

Until Chike Uzuegbunam sued Georgia Gwinnett College, this public institution had performed the public service of instituting a speech code so restrictive that it exposed the entire idea of such codes to wholesome ridicule. When the college pivoted 180 degrees, embracing free speech, Uzuegbunam did not drop his suit. He wanted to make a point: that college officials could be held accountable. So, he pressed on, no longer seeking injunctive relief from the college's flagrantly unconstitutional conduct, but still seeking nominal damages. A dollar would do, and if the college had paid it, this might have prevented the chief justice of the United States from mistakenly disagreeing with his eight colleagues. It would, however, have deprived the nation of an instructive story about the expressive function of the law.

Uzuegbunam is an evangelical Christian who takes seriously Jesus' directive to "teach all nations." He wanted to start with Gwinnett, where he was a student, but the college responded: Never mind the nations, you can proselytize only on the 0.0015 percent of our 260 acres where advocacy speech is permitted — but only if you reserve a spot and your speech does not disturb anyone's "comfort." Uzuegbunam spoke in the prescribed place and stopped when a campus police officer said someone had complained.

It is difficult nowadays to be on the cutting edge of academic absurdity, but Gwinnett got there two ways. First, it stipulated that the First Amendment covers only wee slivers of campus: "free speech expression areas" available only four hours Monday through Thursday, and two hours on Friday, and which individual speakers could reserve only once every 30 days. Then Gwinnett argued that Uzuegbunam's discussion of gentle Jesus meek and mild was "contentious" language with "a tendency to incite hostility," and hence constituted "fighting words" unprotected by the Constitution.

When Gwinnett realized that it was not drawing beneficial attention to itself, it scrapped its entire speech-restricting rigmarole, probably expecting that Uzuegbunam would be mollified. He was not.

This child of Nigerian immigrants has acquired this country's litigious spirit, and he pressed his case for nominal damages. A district court held that his claim was insufficient to keep his case alive after Gwinnett surrendered on the speech restrictions. A circuit court agreed, saying that because Uzuegbunam was not seeking compensatory damages, his claim for nominal damages was insufficient to establish his standing to sue.

Last Monday, the Supreme Court, considering not Gwinnett's conduct but the two lower courts' rulings, disagreed with them. It held 8-to-1 that Uzuegbunam had been injured by Gwinnett's conduct, and that the nominal damages he sought would redress his injury. In an opinion joined by everyone but Chief Justice John Roberts Jr., Justice Clarence Thomas rejected the idea that nominal damages are "a mere judicial token that provides no actual benefit to the plaintiff." They provide a plaintiff with "relief on the merits of his claim." Including a claim, as Justice Samuel Alito Jr. said in January's oral argument in this case, when the violation "can't be easily monetized."

Roberts, dissenting, noted that the Constitution restricts judicial power to the resolution of "cases" and "controversies," and he said the Uzuegbunam episode no longer qualifies as either. He said: When, as in this case, plaintiffs "allege neither actual damages nor the prospect of future injury, an award of nominal damages does not change their status or condition at all. Such an award instead represents a judicial determination that the plaintiffs' interpretation of the law is correct — nothing more."

That, however, is not nothing. It confers on the plaintiff the status of a vindicator of rights, and it puts on notice those who are, or might contemplate, acting on incorrect interpretations of the law.

Justice Elena Kagan addressed this point in January's oral argument. Citing the case in which a jury awarded Taylor Swift the $1 she sought from a Denver radio host she accused of groping her, Kagan suggested that this was Swift's thinking: "I'm not really interested in your money. I just want a dollar, and that dollar is going to represent something both to me and to the world of women who have experienced what I've experienced." Kagan said Swift sought the dollar because it would "say that she had been harmed. Why not?"

Just so. On innumerable campuses, students are being harmed by speech-restriction regimes that chill the free flowing of intellectual differences. A nominal award from Georgia Gwinnett College to Uzuegbunam would acknowledge his injury and stigmatize the college's behavior, and similar behavior elsewhere, as unconstitutional. Neither consequence would be nominal.

HISTORY

Today is Saturday April 3, the 93rd day of 2021. There are 272 days left in the year.

Highlight in history:

On April 3, 1968, civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. delivered what turned out to be his final speech, telling a rally of striking sanitation workers in Memphis, Tennessee, that "I've been to the mountain-top" and "seen the Promised Land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight that we, as a people, will get to the Promised Land!" (About 20 hours later, King was felled by an assassin's bullet at the Lorraine Motel.)

On this date:

In 1860, the legendary Pony Express began carrying mail between St. Joseph, Missouri, and Sacramento, California. (The delivery system lasted only 18 months before giving way to the transcontinental telegraph.)

In 1865, Union forces occupied the Confederate capital of Richmond, Virginia.

In 1882, outlaw Jesse James was shot to death in St. Joseph, Missouri, by Robert Ford, a member of James' gang.

In 1936, Bruno Hauptmann was electrocuted in Trenton, New Jersey, for the kidnap-murder of Charles Lindbergh Jr.

Ham it up for Easter

A glazed ham is an easy way to prepare a celebratory Easter dinner – or any dinner, for that matter. It’s also a gift that keeps on giving, yielding a generous portion of meat that can be shared and repurposed in sandwiches, eggs, hash, soups and salads.

Lynda Balslev

Ham is so easy to prepare because you begin with a fully cooked store-bought ham. The long cook that you will do in the oven or on the grill is essentially a long warm-up, to thoroughly heat the meat and finish the process with a glaze toward the end of the cooking time to give it a crispy, glossy sheen. The glaze can be simple, but should include fruit and sugar, which will naturally balance the saltiness of the ham, while ensuring a crispy, caramelized lacquer. The glaze in this recipe is spiked with bourbon. The alcohol burns off when you cook the glaze, leaving behind smoky, honeyed notes that complement the apricot and maple syrup. A little mustard and lemon juice add body and sharpness.

For best results, purchase a good-quality ham with the bone or partial bone in, which adds more flavor to the ham while cooking. Avoid a spiral ham, because it will easily dry out. Roast the ham in the oven or, better yet, on the grill. Grilling the ham creates another dimension of flavor from the smoke, and also frees up your oven if you have other dishes to prepare. This recipe provides instructions for both methods.

Apricot Bourbon Glazed Ham
Active Time: 20 minutes
Total Time: 3 hours
Yield: Serves: 8 to 10

1 bone-in half ham, fully cooked and smoked, 8 to 10 pounds (not spiralized)
Apricot Bourbon Glaze:
3/4 cup apricot preserves
1/2 cup bourbon
1/4 cup maple syrup
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice

1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
Remove the ham from the refrigerator 30 minutes to 1 hour before cooking. With the tip of a sharp knife, score the rind and about 1/4 inch of the fat in a 1-inch crisscross pattern on all sides except the cut side.

Combine the glaze ingredients in a small saucepan over medium-low heat. Simmer until the preserves dissolve, stirring frequently, about 5 minutes.

If oven roasting, preheat the oven to 300 degrees. Place the ham cut-side down on a rack in a large roasting pan. Pour 1/2 cup water in the bottom of the pan. Cover the pan with foil and roast in the oven for 1 1/2 hours. Remove the foil from the ham and brush with some of the glaze. Continue to cook without the foil until the internal temperature registers 135 degrees when an instant-read thermometer is inserted close to the bone without touching (about 1 to 1 1/2 more hours more), brushing the glaze over the ham every 20 to 30 minutes or so. The ham should develop a deep mahogany color. If it gets too dark before the ham reaches the desired temperature, loosely cover with the foil for the remainder of the cooking time.

If using a grill, prepare the grill for indirect cooking over medium-low heat (about 300 degrees). Place the ham directly in a grill pan. Grill over indirect heat with the grill lid closed for 1 1/2 hours. Brush with some of the glaze. Continue to cook until the internal temperature registers 135 degrees when an instant-read thermometer is inserted close to the bone (about 1 to 1 1/2 more hours more), brushing the glaze over the ham every 20 to 30 minutes or so. The ham should develop a deep mahogany color. If it gets too dark before the ham reaches the desired temperature, loosely cover with foil for the remainder of the cooking time.

Transfer the ham to a cutting board and let rest for 20 minutes. If desired, pour the pan juices into the remaining glaze. Carve the ham into serving pieces and serve with the glaze.

After coronavirus delays, health experts urge return to cancer screenings

By NATALIE WEBER
Tampa Bay Times (TNS)

VALRICO, Fla. — At first, the symptoms just seemed like hemorrhoids. Stephanie Luke was a healthy 38-year-old, so she chalked up the blood in her stools to rectal inflammation. But after a month, at the end of November, she underwent a colonoscopy and was diagnosed with stage II colorectal cancer – a progression of the disease into nearby tissues. The Valrico woman went into planning mode, asking her doctor what came next. Later, by herself, she would have moments where she asked, “Why me?” She underwent genetic testing that proved what she already knew: Her family had no history of the cancer. “I was kind of in shock but stuff doesn’t hit me until later, usually,” she said. Now, Luke urges anyone who notices potential symptoms to get screened right away. “If you know something’s not right with your body, you have to be your own advocate and make sure you go and get it checked out,” she said. It’s a message cancer experts always emphasize, but one that carries new urgency during the COVID-19 pandemic. They’ve seen improvement as coronavirus cases and deaths decline, but they still fear people are reluctant to leave their homes – ignoring routine screenings and even possible symptoms. This reluctance may delay detection and treatment until the cancer reaches a later, more dangerous stage. According to provisional data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, cancer was the second-leading cause of death nationwide in 2020. Heart disease was No. 1 at 690,000 deaths, followed by cancer at 598,000 deaths and COVID-19 at 345,000 coronavirus deaths. In 2019, the latest full year that data was available, cancer was the second-highest cause of death in Florida, claiming the lives of 45,562 people. The pandemic’s impact on screenings and treatments could cause 10,000 “excess deaths” from colorectal and breast cancer, according to the National Cancer Institute. Another study from the United Kingdom predicted an increase in cancer deaths during the next five years compared to deaths before the pandemic – up to 10 percent in breast cancer deaths, up to 17 percent in colorectal cancer deaths, and up to 5 percent in lung cancer deaths. “We missed a very large number of screenings, more so than I think we can really hope to make up,” said Dr. Ned Sharpless, director of the National Cancer Institute. Even if medical professionals boosted cancer screenings beyond historic levels, it would be difficult to make up the difference, Sharpless said.

Social Security recipients and most other federal beneficiaries should see direct deposit stimulus payments by April 7

The IRS and the Treasury Department finally have a payment date for the millions of Social Security recipients and most other federal beneficiaries who do not have to file tax returns. The majority of their stimulus payments will be sent electronically, with an official payment date of April 7, according to the announcement Tuesday.

Stimulus relief payments to federal beneficiaries who do not have recent tax returns on file with the IRS or who did not use the IRS online “non-filers tool” had been delayed, resulting in criticism and concern among would-be recipients. In total, about 127 million payments worth $325 billion have been distributed over the past three weeks. The American Rescue Plan provides for payments of up to $1,400 for eligible individuals and $2,800 for couples filing joint returns. Dependents, regardless of age, also receive $1,400 each.

The IRS had said it would automatically send economic impact payments, which is what the agency calls the stimulus payments, to people who did not file returns but who receive Supplemental Security Income (SSI), Social Security retirement, survivor or disability (SSDI), Railroad Retirement, or Veterans Affairs (VA) benefits. But many of these federal beneficiaries, including nearly 30 million Social Security and SSI benefit recipients, have been waiting for news about their payments.

“I am a 69-year-old widow living on SSI widow’s benefits,” a Florida woman said by email. “I can use the extra money, and I hear on the news every day how many people in my area have received their third stimulus payment. What is going on? I can really use this money.”

The wait is coming to an end if all goes as planned, the IRS and Treasury said. Now that the IRS has the information it needs from the Social Security Administration, the majority of stimulus payments to federal beneficiaries will be disbursed electronically – through direct deposits or to existing Direct Express cards, which are prepaid debit cards used to deliver federal benefits.

However, the IRS estimates stimulus payments for VA beneficiaries, who do not regularly file tax returns, could be delayed until mid-April. The agency said it is reviewing data for VA benefit recipients and expects to determine a payment date and provide more details soon.

“We know how important these payments are, and we are doing everything we can to make these payments as fast as possible to these important individuals,” IRS Commissioner Charles Rettig said in the statement. Here’s a roundup of other announcements the IRS has made over the past several days.

■ Stimulus payments for federal beneficiaries. The payments are automatic, so there’s nothing beneficiaries have to do. However, some federal benefit recipients still may need to file 2020 tax returns to claim the economic impact payments for qualified dependents. The IRS otherwise will not know to disburse the payments for the dependents. Also, be aware that the form of payment may be different from in earlier stimulus rounds. So, be sure to check your mail for either a check or prepaid debit card. Eventually, with updates from IRS, you should be able to check the status of your stimulus payment by using the “Get My Payment” tool at irs.gov, which is available in English and Spanish.

■ COVID masks now covered. Personal protective equipment – such as masks, hand sanitizer and sanitizing wipes used to prevent the spread of the coronavirus – is now deductible as a medical expense, the IRS announced last week.

The IRS said taxpayers can use funds in their health savings accounts (HSAs) or flexible spending account (FSAs) to buy paper and cloth masks. Hand sanitizer and surface cleaners that are used to prevent the spread of the virus also are eligible. With an FSA and HSA, you can set aside money, pretax, to pay certain qualified health expenses.

The contribution limit for an employee who chooses to participate in an FSA is $2,750 for 2021. Contributions are not subject to federal income tax, Social Security tax or Medicare tax.

Health savings accounts are linked to high-deductible health plans (HDHPs), and, like FSAs, they also can be used for various out-of-pocket expenses. The maximum amount you’re allowed to contribute to an HSA for 2021 is $3,600 as an individual or $7,200 as a family. People 55 or older can contribute an extra $1,000 annually to an HSA.

■ IRA contribution deadline extended. In other news, the IRS said it is giving individuals additional time to make 2020 contributions to their individual retirement accounts, such as an IRA or Roth IRA. The deadline is now May 17, as the IRS has extended the tax season for individuals to May 17.

The annual IRA contribution limit for 2020 is $6,000, plus an additional $1,000 for taxpayers 50 and older.

People funding health savings accounts and Coverdell education savings accounts also have until May 17 to make 2020 contributions. Assuming you meet the income requirement for a Coverdell ESA, the annual contribution limit is $2,000 per beneficiary.

■ COVID-related student financial aid not taxed. The IRS announced Tuesday that emergency financial aid grants made by a federal agency, state, Indian tribe, higher education institution, or scholarship-granting organization will not have to be included in a student’s gross income if related to the pandemic.

■ Unclaimed refunds. By law, taxpayers have just three years to claim refunds. For 2017 returns, that would have been April 15. But now people have until May 17 to file 2017 returns and claim any refunds due.

There’s a lot going on this tax season. I highly recommend you regularly check irs.gov for updates.

Blocking of Indiana cigarette tax hike frustrates advocates

By TOM DAVIES
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Supporters of boosting Indiana’s cigarette tax expressed frustration Friday with a decision by state Senate Republicans to drop any increase from their state budget proposal being released next week. The removal of the 50 cents-per-pack increase that was included in the House budget bill is the latest rejection of a cigarette tax hike by Republicans who dominate the Senate. For several years, they have blocked any increase of the current 99.5 cents-per-pack rate that was last raised in 2007. A coalition of health and business groups has pushed for a $2-per-pack increase, calling it a needed step toward driving down Indiana’s 21.1 percent smoking rate for adults, which was the fourth highest in the country for 2018, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Indiana Chamber of Commerce President Kevin Brinegar argued it “boils down to the decision makers in the Senate majority caucus just are not looking at this from the right perspective.” Brinegar said senators were weighing the tax increase on whether it was needed for the budget rather than using it to reduce smoking. “The reason we’re advocating for this is to reduce our smoking rate because it has been demonstrated through study after study that raising the tax on tobacco products is the best way to reduce smoking rate,” Brinegar said. Republican Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray said Thursday that the cigarette tax increase was being stripped from the budget plan as it didn’t have enough support among GOP senators.

Lieutenant: Kneeling on Floyd’s neck ‘totally unnecessary’

By STEVE KARNOWSKI, AMY FORLITI and TAMMY WEBBER
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Kneeling on George Floyd ‘s neck while he was handcuffed and lying on his stomach was top-tier, deadly force and “totally unnecessary,” the head of the Minneapolis Police Department’s homicide division testified Friday.

“If your knee is on a person’s neck, that can kill him,” said Lt. Richard Zimmerman, adding that when a person is handcuffed behind their back, “your muscles are pulling back ... and if you’re laying on your chest, that’s constricting your breathing even more.”

Zimmerman, who said he is the most senior person on the police force, also testified at Derek Chauvin’s murder trial that once Floyd was handcuffed, he saw “no reason for why the officers felt they were in danger – if that’s what they felt – and that’s what they would have to feel to be able to use that kind of force.”

“So in your opinion, should that restraint have stopped once he was handcuffed and thrown on the ground?” prosecutor Matthew Frank asked.

“Absolutely,” replied Zimmerman, who said he has never been trained to kneel on someone’s neck.

He also testified that officers have a duty to provide care for a person in distress, even if an ambulance already has been called.

Officers kept restraining Floyd – with Chauvin kneeling on his neck, another kneeling on Floyd’s back and a third holding his feet – until the ambulance arrived, even after he became unresponsive.

One officer asked twice if they should roll Floyd on his side to aid his breathing, and later said calmly that he thought Floyd was passing out. Another checked Floyd’s wrist for a pulse and said he couldn’t find one.

Under cross examination, Chauvin attorney Eric Nelson peppered Zimmerman with questions about the use of force, pointing out that officers must consider the entire situation – including what is happening with a suspect, whether the suspect is under the influence, and other surrounding hazards, such as a crowd.

The defense has argued that Chauvin did what he was trained to do when he encountered Floyd last May and that Floyd’s death was caused not by the knee on his neck – as prosecutors contend – but by drugs, his underlying health conditions and adrenaline. An autopsy found fentanyl and methamphetamine in his system.

Chauvin is also heard on body-camera footage defending his decision to an onlooker after Floyd was taken away by paramedics, saying: “We gotta control this guy ‘cause he’s a sizable guy ... and it looks like he’s probably on something.”

Chauvin, 45 and white, is charged with killing Floyd by pinning his knee on the 46-year-old Black man’s neck for 9 minutes, 29 seconds, as he lay face-down in handcuffs. Floyd had been accused of passing a counterfeit $20 bill at a neighborhood market.

Zimmerman agreed with Nelson that a person who is handcuffed still can pose a threat and can continue to thrash around.

And he agreed when Nelson asked if officers who believe they’re in a fight for their lives could use “whatever force is reasonable and necessary,” including by improvising.

“Did you see any need for Officer Chauvin to improvise by putting his knee on Mr. Floyd for 9 minutes and 29 seconds?” Frank later asked Zimmerman.

“No, I did not,” said Zimmerman, who said that based on his review of police body camera footage, the officers did not appear to be in danger from Floyd or about 15 on-lookers.

Nelson has suggested that the bystanders – many of whom were shouting at Chauvin to get off Floyd as he went motionless – may have distracted officers and affected their response. The prosecution, however, noted that officers on the scene did not call for backup.

WASHINGTON — America’s employers unleashed a burst of hiring in March, adding 916,000 jobs in a sign that a sustained recovery from the pandemic recession is taking hold as vaccinations accelerate, stimulus checks flow through the economy and businesses increasingly reopen.

The March increase – the most since August – was nearly double February’s gain of 468,000, the Labor Department said Friday. The unemployment rate declined from 6.2 percent to 6 percent.

Even with last month’s robust increase, the economy remains more than 8 million jobs short of the number it had before the pandemic erupted a little over a year ago. But with the recovery widely expected to strengthen, many forecasters predict enough hiring in the coming months to recover nearly all those lost jobs by year’s end.

Regaining all those jobs, though, will be a daunting task.

“We can rejoice in these numbers, but we still have a lot of work to do,” said Jane Oates, president of Working-Nation and a former Labor Department official. “There are millions of workers we need to get back into jobs.”

Bond investors sent yields higher, a sign that financial markets are optimistic about a solid recovery that could produce higher prices for some goods and services. The yield on the 10-year U.S. Treasury note rose from 1.68 percent to 1.71 percent. Stock markets are closed for Good Friday.

The brightening outlook for the labor market follows a year of epic job losses, waves of coronavirus infections and small business closures. Numerous signs suggest that the economy is improving. Consumer confidence in March reached its highest level since the pandemic intensified.

A survey found that manufacturing grew in March at its fastest pace since 1983. And vaccinations are increasingly being administered, although new confirmed infections have risen from lower levels in recent weeks.

Speaking after the government issued the jobs report, President Joe Biden said it showed that his $1.9 trillion financial rescue package – which included $1,400 checks to most adults – was already boosting the economy. Biden argued, though, that further assistance in the form of the infrastructure package his administration unveiled this week, was needed to sustain the gains.

“The fight’s far from over,” the president said in televised remarks. “The progress we’ve worked so hard to achieve can be reversed.”

Yet many Republican lawmakers have already pointed to the burgeoning economy as evidence that further government support isn’t needed.

Last month, hiring strengthened across the economy. Restaurants, hotels and bars – the sector most damaged by the virus – added 216,000 jobs. Construction companies, aided by better weather after severe storms in February, gained 110,000.

Manufacturers added 53,000. And professional and business services, which include such well-paying fields as engineering and architecture, gained 66,000.

The pandemic recession inflicted job losses disproportionately on racial minorities and lower-income workers. Wealthier and well-educated workers have been far less likely to lose jobs, in large part because of a greater ability to work from home. Much of the hiring now occurring at bars, restaurants and other areas of the hospitality industry is helping to close that gap, though there’s still a long way to go.

Last month, in an encouraging sign, about 500,000 women returned to the workforce and found jobs, in part a reflection of school re-openings around the country. Women disproportionately quit jobs or stopped looking for work during the pandemic, in many cases because they had to care for children attending school online from home. A reversal of that trend will be important as employers seek to rapidly rehire.

Friday’s jobs report pointed to some challenges ahead. The number of people who have been out of work for six months or more – who tend to face a particularly hard time finding a job – increased. They now constitute more than 40 percent of the unemployed.

And the number of people who say they’ve permanently lost their jobs barely declined in March. Many of the people who did find jobs last month had been classified as temporarily unemployed.

But optimism is rising, in part because the $1,400 checks in Biden’s economic relief plan have sharply increased consumer spending, according to Bank of America’s tracking of its debit and credit cards. Spending jumped 23 percent in the third week of March compared with pre-pandemic levels, the bank said.

Spending had begun to rise in March even before the stimulus checks arrived as viral case counts have tumbled from their heights in January. Americans are increasingly willing to venture out from home to travel and eat out, though not yet at their pre-pandemic pace. Roughly 1.5 million people traveled through airports on March 28, according to the Transportation Services Administration. That was roughly eight times the figure of a year ago, although it was still down sharply from 2.5 million on the same day in 2019.

Hiring is increasing in higher-paying industries such as information technology and finance – a sign of growing confidence in the recovery. Businesses typically add such jobs only when they feel sure their customer demand will be sustained.

One high-tech company that’s expanding its workforce is Olive, a healthcare artificial intelligence company based in Columbus, Ohio, that links up disparate billing and insurance systems. The 600-person company has 90 open positions, including jobs for software engineers, product managers and financial analysts.

Olive has decided to continue remote work even after the pandemic has been controlled, said Sean Lane, the CEO. Productivity has increased since the company went remote, allowing him to recruit from nearly anywhere in the country. The company now has employees in 40 states.

“Our customers ... are eager to adopt several new technologies we are rolling out this year,” Lane said. “We are confident in our growth plans.”

Still, the surge of hiring last month raises an important question: Can it continue at the same pace? Besides the 8.4 million fewer jobs that now exist in the U.S. economy than just before the virus struck, an additional 2 million or so jobs would have been added in the past year under normal circumstances. That means the U.S. economy still needs roughly 11.5 million more jobs to regain something close to full health.

Louise Sheiner, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution and formerly an economist at the Federal Reserve, has estimated that hiring could average between 700,000 and 1 million a month for the rest of the year, if the economy expands at the 6.5 percent pace that the Fed and many economists expect. That would leave total job growth for 2021 at somewhere between 7 million and 10 million.

In part, her forecast is based on the fact that the pandemic recession has deeply hurt labor-intensive parts of the economy, from hotels and restaurants to health care and the entertainment industry. A recovery in those sectors, even a partial one, would require significantly more hiring. In addition, Sheiner said, higher consumer spending, fueled by stimulus checks and pent-up savings, should drive job growth in other industries.

A black and white cartoon illustration of a steamship with a friendly face, large eyes, and a wide smile. The ship is holding a large stack of newspapers in its outstretched hand. The top newspaper is clearly visible, showing the word 'NEWS' and a picture of a person. The ship has a smokestack with a flag and an anchor on its side. It is sailing on stylized waves. The background features a large, stylized cloud and two birds in flight. At the bottom, a bold, serif font reads 'JOIN THE READERSHIP. SUBSCRIBE TODAY!'

Man talks about his will but won't put it in writing

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to my husband for seven years. We are in our 60s. He refuses to make a will. He tells me what he “would” put in his will and asks me if I am OK with his wishes.

Dear Abby

He has an adult child from his first marriage and would like to include her in the will. I'm fine with what he wants. This conversation has been going on for more than five years now, but he never acts on it. I am very hurt and frustrated.

The house is in his name, and my name isn't even on his checking accounts. I resent him for this. There are times when I want to get a divorce because I feel if something should happen to him, I will have no security. I also think he is being selfish and unloving to me and his adult child to leave us in a situation where we would have to go through the probate process. Please help me to get through to him. — Resentful In Maine

DEAR RESENTFUL: Your husband may be afraid to face the idea of his own mortality. He wouldn't be the first. The two of you need to make an appointment with an attorney who specializes in wills and estates. If he doesn't put his wishes in writing, the assets he has worked so hard for may be seriously diminished when the state decides “for him” and takes a sizable chunk out of the estate.

While you are talking with the lawyer, there should also be a discussion of end-of-life planning. Does he want hospice? Palliative care? Do you know what his wishes are in the event he is unable to speak for himself? Those wishes should be in writing and so should YOURS. (This subject should also be raised with your doctor(s).)

Most people want to keep what they have worked for and decide for themselves what will happen when they die. Death is a fact of life, and hiding from it won't make it go away.

DEAR ABBY: I send out lots of greeting cards every year for birthdays, anniversaries and Christmas. I keep a large number of them on hand so I am prepared.

I received a Christmas card this year from an elderly family member that said: “Thank you for the insulting anniversary card.” “Insulting” was underlined twice. I was dismayed. Their anniversary was last August. I have no idea which card I sent since I keep so many on hand. I am guessing it may have been a humorous card that they didn't find funny, but I'm not sure.

Both are very alert and oriented. What is the proper thing to do here? Do I call them and apologize when I have no idea what it said? Should I not send an anniversary card next year or send a very generic one? I have been very upset that my good wishes were so poorly received. Any advice you can give would be appreciated. Thank you. — Confused In The Midwest

DEAR CONFUSED: Call the couple and ASK what it was about the card that upset them. Explain that it wasn't your intention to offend them, and apologize. DO send an anniversary card when the time comes, but when you do, make absolutely certain the message inside is appropriate.

No Easter without the resurrection

Q: Easter seems to be a time of emerging from the dark winter into hope and new life. But the religious emphasis seems far-fetched. Why does Easter have to be centered on religion? — E.U.

A: There would be no Easter without the truth of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Springtime itself speaks of new life. The resurrection gives meaning and power to the cross. The ultimate victory of the cross is that it could not hold the Savior of the world who rose to new life and was victorious over death. He finished His work for mankind there but the cross did not finish Him. He triumphed over sin, winning salvation for mankind. Easter would mean nothing without this powerful truth, carrying our hopes beyond the coldness and depths of the grave.

Some believe that Jesus died leaving a legacy of being a good teacher who left behind profound thoughts and challenges, but they reject the truth that He was raised

Billy Graham
My Answer

He lived among us and ultimately conquered the sting of death, offering the human race the greatest gift — His sacrificial love.

from the dead. Others think the resurrection was a hoax. There are those who question whether Jesus even existed. True believers in Jesus Christ have no doubt that

The bloodstained cross is gruesome to some, but the empty cross is full of hope. The death of Christ, perpetrated by evil men, was thought by them to be the end, but His grave became but a doorway to victory. Jesus purchased our redemption and provided righteousness that we could not ourselves earn. The cross is the symbol of salvation because it represents doom for sin and hope for sinners. Christ's sacrifice condemns sin and cleanses souls. This is the ultimate victory.

MU outdoor track teams second in HCAC Preseason Poll

The Spartans will open the outdoor season on Saturday, April 3, at Hanover College

By DILLON BENDER

The Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference (HCAC) announced the results of the 2021 Men's and Women's Outdoor Track and Field Preseason Poll, on Wednesday, March 31.

Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology was selected as the preseason favorites in both preseason polls, while Manchester University was picked to finish second in the polls.

For the men, Rose-Hulman earned 90 points to claim the top spot in Wednesday's poll. Manchester was a close second with 80 points. Hanover College finished third with 64 points, while Bluffton University narrowly beat out Defiance College with 54 and 53 points for fourth and fifth, respectively.

In the women's race, the Fightin' Engineers also took first place, collecting 90 points. Manchester was picked second, with 78 points, while Hanover finished just behind in third with 75 points. Rounding out the top five, Bluffton took fourth with 56 points and Franklin College finished in fifth with 48 points. The Black and Gold both placed second at the 2021 HCAC Indoor Track & Field Championships

Twelve Spartans were picked as "Athletes to Watch" by the league. MU will open the outdoor season on Saturday, April 3, at Hanover College.

Pinarski and Kresl named HCAC Players of the Week

After a strong 4-1 week, MU baseball swept this week's awards

By DILLON BENDER

After a strong 4-1 week, Manchester University baseball swept this week's conference player of the week awards.

Senior Michael Pinarski, from Goshen, was tabbed as the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference (HCAC) Hitter of the Week, the league announced on Monday. Pinarski went 9-17 at the dish with three doubles and a home run last week. Pinarski scored five runs while collecting three RBIs. His hot play at the plate raised his season batting average to .347.

Additionally, Michael earned his first save of the season in Manchester's 5-4 win over Rose-Hulman. Pinarski ended the game with back-to-back strikeouts, helping MU earn a doubleheader sweep over the Fightin' Engineers.

Junior Austin Kresl, from Fort Wayne and Carroll High School, was named the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference Pitcher of the Week following a couple of outstanding performances last week.

Kresl earned his first collegiate save in Wednesday's 11-8 win over Bluffton. Austin allowed just one hit in the ninth inning and registered a strikeout as he helped the Spartans close out the Beavers.

On Saturday afternoon, Austin pitched 10 full innings against Rose-Hulman, allowing just 1 run on 6 hits. He struck out 5 Engineers on the day. More impressively, Kresl threw just 97 pitches against RHIT – 71 of which were strikes. Manchester would go on to win the game 2-1 in extra innings.

Manchester returned to Gratz Field on Friday,

April 2, with a doubleheader against Bluffton. The first pitch was moved up to noon.

Miller, Arnold earn singles victories against Trine

Manchester will visit Bethel on April 10

By DILLON BENDER

The Manchester University men's tennis team battled the visiting Trine Thunder in a non-conference match at the MU Tennis Courts on Saturday, March 27.

The Thunder topped Manchester 7-2.

Senior Isaac Miller, from Millersburg and Fairfield High School, picked up his sixth singles victory of the season after topping Trine's

Isaac Everitt 6-2, 6-2 at the no. 1 flight.

Sophomore Austin Arnold, from Coatesville and South Putnam High School, added a 6-1, 7-6 victory at the no. 3 singles position. Arnold has now won five singles matches this season.

Manchester (2-7) will be in action on April 10 at Bethel. The Spartans will play both Bethel University and Grace Christian in Michigan.

Manchester men's soccer downs Bluffton 3-0 on Wednesday

Spartans improve to 5-3 HCAC

By DILLON BENDER

The Manchester University men's soccer team scored a trio of first-half goals en route to a 3-0 victory at Bluffton on Wednesday, March 31.

The Black and Gold jumped out to an early lead following a score in the sixth minute off the foot of Harley Kruschwitz, from North Manchester and Manchester High School. Josh Gonzalez, from Portage, provided the assist on the Kruschwitz goal.

In the 24th minute, Cory

Mitchell, from Maitland, Florida, and Winter Park High School, finished in the back of the net off of a delivery from Kruschwitz, pushing the Spartans' lead to 2-0.

Jacob Knepper, from Indianapolis and Mt. Vernon High School, would score the third and final goal for Manchester in the 39th minute.

On the day, the Black and Gold held an 18-7 advantage in shots taken.

Manchester improved to 5-3 HCAC with the win. MU hosted rival Anderson on Friday, April 2, at Spartan Stadium beginning at 4 p.m.

NCAA has not tested for drugs at championships

By EDDIE PELLIS

AP National Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The NCAA has not tested players for performance-enhancing drugs at March Madness and other recent college championships, The Associated Press has learned. Three people with direct knowledge of NCAA testing protocols said full-scale testing has not resumed since the coronavirus pandemic shut down college sports a year ago.

Although athletes may have been tested on campus, either through the NCAA program or those run by schools, the NCAA has not ramped up its usual testing program at national championships such as the men's and women's basketball tournaments. The tournaments wrap up with Final Four games starting with the women's semifinals Friday.

The NCAA has tested for drugs since 1986, and has changed and enhanced its policy over the years. Unlike some leagues and anti-doping organizations, it does not reveal the number of tests it conducts. Players who test positive can be kicked out of championships, and can lose a year or more of eligibility.

But the three people familiar with testing protocols told AP that the number of tests received from NCAA events went to zero after the COVID-19 pandemic shut down sports last spring. They said testing has recently resumed sporadically, but only via on-campus collections.

The people, who did not want their names used because of the sensitivity of the subject, all confirmed the same thing: No tests from the organization's signature events – the men's and women's basketball

"We do not confirm drug testing at championships sites, especially when they are ongoing. That would defeat the purpose of our unannounced testing at championships. Further, we do not announce when we perform our extensive year-round unannounced drug testing outside of championships."

BRIAN HAINLINE

NCAA chief medical officer

tournaments and, earlier this year, the college football playoffs – have been received by the labs that analyze the NCAA tests.

The NCAA wouldn't answer questions about specifics of its drug-testing program, and says the mere possibility of unannounced tests can be a deterrent to doping. In an email exchange with the AP, NCAA spokesman Chris Radford would not answer whether testing was being conducted for players after they arrived in Indianapolis and San Antonio for the tournaments in mid-March.

"We do not confirm drug testing at championships sites, especially when they are ongoing," the NCAA's chief medical officer, Brian Hainline, told AP in a follow-up email. "That would defeat the purpose of our unannounced testing at championships. Further, we do not announce when we perform our extensive year-round unannounced drug testing outside of championships."

This shutdown comes as the NCAA focuses on coronavirus testing as a way of keeping March Madness on track. On Thursday, NCAA president Mark Emmert said the association had conducted more than 41,000 COVID-19 tests over the course of the basketball tournaments.

Though drug testing in college sports doesn't receive as much scrutiny as in Olympic sports, the issue has impacted major programs.

At the college football playoff that closed the 2018 season, three Clemson players were suspended after testing positive for a performance-enhancing drug. In 2015, the NCAA sanctioned the Syracuse basketball program for a variety of violations, including not following its own drug-testing rules.

The NCAA manual on drug-testing says: "NCAA drug-testing is a possibility at any and all NCAA championship rounds and sites. However, as a best practice, the NCAA will not announce whether or not drug testing will occur at any specific venue."

While the unpredictability can work as a deterrent, some sports officials say not conducting actual tests can leave a sport open to doped athletes winning championships.

"If you don't actually follow through and do the testing, that could be perceived as a weak link," said Bob Copeland, who cleaned up a steroid-addled football program when he was athletic director at University of Waterloo in Canada. Copeland said he was speaking about doping protocols in general and wasn't familiar with the NCAA's rules.

The NCAA wasn't alone in putting its testing program on hiatus in the imme-diated aftermath of the coronavirus outbreak. Sending collectors out to gather urine and blood samples was deemed too risky, and most U.S. and international testing programs went dark.

The anti-doping tests were deemed too important to leave shuttered for the long-term, however, and when major events such as the Olympics were placed back on the schedule, sports organizations started finding new ways to resume testing.

It's possible the NCAA didn't want to add sample collectors to the mix of people that would have to be cleared to have close contact with players at the arenas, which is where the urine collection traditionally takes place. It's also possible that the shift in focus has come as the NCAA invested heavily in COVID-19 testing and COVID-19 protocols. Typically, a doping test for college sports would cost between $150 and $200 to process, and only a fraction of players in a given game would be tested.

The NCAA spokesman, Radford, told AP "the NCAA has conducted drug testing in the month of March and also in preceding months," but he would not reveal whether it had been done at the tournament.

College sports have long been criticized for employing testing protocols that are considered beneath the standards set at the Olympics, the the NFL or Major League Baseball. One main critique of the colleges is a lack of uniformity. Most of the testing and decisions about punishments are left to individual schools, which sometimes write their own rules, or, in other cases, adhere to a conference policy.

Manchester softball will host nationally-ranked Transylvania on Saturday

By DILLON BENDER

The Manchester University softball team dropped a road doubleheader at Defiance College on Monday afternoon.

The Yellow Jackets rallied for a come-from-behind victory in Monday's opener, winning by a final score of 6-4. Defiance College then followed with an 8-1 victory in the second game.

Game 1: Defiance defeated Manchester 6-4.

Game 2: Defiance defeated Manchester 8-1.

Senior Page Magner, from North Vernon and Jennings County High School, hit a two-run home run in the top of the first inning to put the Spartans ahead 2-0 in Monday's opening game. Magner went 2-4 in the opener.

Defiance plated five runs in the fifth inning and added another run in the bottom of the 6th to grab a 6-2 lead.

Manchester would plate a pair of runs in the top of the seventh inning but was unable to overtake the Yellow Jackets.

Alexis Mokos, from Cedar Lake and Hanover Central High School, went 3-4 in Game 1 with a run scored.

Four Spartans had multi-hit efforts in the second game on Monday: Kodi Douglass, Brook Reaves, Lizzie Smith, and Alexis Mokos.

Yellow Jacket pitcher Savannah McCoy was able to strand eight Spartan base-runners en route to her 3rd win of the season.

The Spartans will host nationally-ranked Transylvania on Saturday, April 3, at the MU Softball Field in a doubleheader beginning at 1 p.m.

Saturday's doubleheader will officially kickoff Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference play.

Salvation is ours because of Christ's crucifixion upon the cross. He died so that we could be forgiven. Salvation is God's gift to us; in return we can grow in wisdom and in the Spirit and spread God's love to others. In 1 John 4:16-17, we read, "God is love. Whoever lives in love lives in God, and God in him. In this way love is made complete among us." This Easter, accept God's gift of love and share it with joy!
